Optimizing older adults’ lived experience requires attention to many issues, including access to healthcare, navigating healthcare systems, challenges like isolation, loneliness, and elder abuse/mistreatment, and promoting physical and mental health. These issues can be more daunting for LGBTQ+ older adults whose life experiences may shape or impact their openness to healthcare providers, such that they may struggle with barriers others do not. Empowering them to be advocates and savvy consumers of healthcare and social services is beneficial. The availability of culturally competent and responsive healthcare providers and services, as well as a commitment to policies and practices that improve health outcomes for older LGBTQ+ persons, is paramount.
