

The Endocannabinoid System

Research has identified two cannabinoid receptors: CB1 and CB2. Both receptors can be found throughout the body, including in the brain, spinal cord, bone and organs.

Ongoing research is focused on identifying the function of individual cannabinoids and cannabinoid receptors at various locations in the body.

A understanding of the endocannabinoid system may allow scientists to exploit the benefits of cannabis to treat pain and addiction.

